

Other services that could support me

< Previous topic | Go to Step 4 >

There are many other organisations that can provide different services and supports to help meet your needs. Exploring your hopes and dreams and then setting goals toward meeting them can help you to work out what type of services and supports you may need. When you know what type of supports you need you can explore what is available near you.

You can find information about supports through:

- Your local GP
- The National Disability Insurance Agency's list of NDIS registered providers
- The national online Mental Health Gateway Head to Health
- Your local community based mainstream mental health services – both government/public and non-government/community based – that continue to exist alongside the NDIS. To find out about these you can contact your state or territory public mental health services and/or mental health mental health peak bodies . A list of these is also below.

Mental Health 'Gateway'

There is no national resource for accessing all mental health programs available. However, as part of the Australian Government's mental health reforms, they have established a new online Mental Health Gateway called Head to Health <https://headtohealth.gov.au/>.

The gateway directs people to the help they need and is a first point of entry to mental health services. It aims to help people living with a mental health condition to more easily navigate these services by providing online access and telephone support to assist with

- using digital technologies, including e-therapies and self-help resources
- access tools and information needed to make informed choices about their care
- access evidence-based information and advice, and connect people to the services they need.
